Other Business:

1. From Dr. Boniecki: [Although this is not an action item to vote on, the Provost is seeking feedback from the UGC]. The current form to convert a course to online or hybrid delivery requires action by the department committee, chair, college committee, and dean, then must be routed as an information item through all the appropriate university councils. Under this process, converting a course to online or hybrid delivery takes months. As it stands, courses not approved under this process that were taught online or hybrid because of the pandemic cannot be taught online or hybrid this upcoming fall term unless approved this spring. If faculty want to continue teaching any of these courses online or as a hybrid, there is simply no time under this current process to approve these courses. The Provost and Council of Deans is proposing a new form that will expedite the process of converting an existing course to online or hybrid delivery by only requiring approval from the department chair, dean, and provost. The decision to allow a course to be taught online is an operational and personnel decision, not a curriculum one. The course descriptions, learning objectives, and place within the curriculum of online or hybrid courses are not different from traditional courses; therefore, review by department, college, and university curriculum committees is not appropriate.

One concern raised by the council was why not include the department curriculum committee? Seems like it could get political if the process just involves one faculty member, chair and dean. Dr. Boniecki said that decision could be left up to the department.

Another concern was whether we needed a form at all. Dr. Boniecki said that this suggestion was discussed but we still believe the decisions to deliver courses online or as a hybrid need to be documented.

Meeting adjourned at 2:16 pm
